Berlin forest fire contained but ammo depot still a problem

Military vehicles of the Bundswehr stand are seen on motorway A115 near the closed motorway access Huettenweg, due to an explosion in munitions depot in the Grunewald forest in Berlin

AP | Berlin

A fire accompanied by explosions at a police ammunition depot in a Berlin forest was contained and large parts of it were extinguished yesterday, but officials said they were determining whether the ammunition stored at the facility needed to be stabilized and cooled down.

The fire broke out early Thursday in the Grunewald forest, located on the western edge of the German capital. The area burning is far from the nearest homes, and no one had to be evacuated, although a nearby highway and railway line remained closed.

Authorities declared a 1,000-meter (more than half-mile) exclusion zone around the depot. Berlin's fire service said wildfires on the ground in the area around the storage site were largely extinguished by yesterday morning. Cooler weather with at least a little rain brightened the outlook.

The ammunition dump itself, though, remained a problem. Experts approached it in armored vehicles to locate ammunition that might still pose a risk, fire service chief Karsten Homrighausen said.

They were evaluating whether crews need to cool down the stored supplies to prevent more detonations and if officials can scale back the exclusion zone. The German military said trying to drop water on the site from the air wasn't an option.

It remains unclear what triggered the first explosions at the ammunition dump. The site was created in Cold War-era West Berlin in 1950, and 25 metric tons or more of fireworks, World War II ammunition and other explosive ordnance was stored there before the fire started. Controlled blasts are carried out at the site twice a year.

YOU KNOW WHAT

Of particular concern are two World War Two bombs, which are currently too hot and pose a danger until they can be cooled to a normal temperature, as well as a ground temperature of 700 degrees Celsius (1,300 Farenheit)

Ukraine seeks to extend shipping safe passage deal beyond grain

Reuters | Kyiv

Three grain ships left Ukrainian ports yesterday while the first inbound cargo vessel since Russia's invasion was due in Ukraine to load, as Kyiv called for the safe passage deal to be extended to other cargoes such as metals.

The July 22 deal marked a rare diplomatic breakthrough as war rages in eastern Ukraine, with Kyiv trying to rebuild its shattered economy after more than five months of conflict.

"We expect that the security guarantees of our partners from the UN and Turkey will continue to work, and food exports from our ports will become stable and predictable for all market participants," Ukrainian Infrastructure Minister Oleksandr Kubrakov said on Facebook after the ships set off.

"This agreement is about logistics, about the movement of vessels through the Black Sea," Ukrainian Deputy Economy Minister Taras Kachka told Financial Times. "What's the difference between grain and iron ore?"

The United Nations and Turkey brokered the safe passage deal between Moscow and Kyiv after U.N. warnings of possible outbreaks of famine due to a halt in grain shipments from Ukraine through the Russian-dominated Black Sea.

The Turkish-flagged cargo ship Polarnet leaves the sea port in Chornomorsk after restarting grain export, amid Russia's attack on Ukraine

Ukraine's Seaport Authority said on Monday there were 68 ships in Ukrainian ports with 1.2 million tonnes of cargo on board, two thirds of it food

Fahrettin Altun, a top aide to Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan, said the safe passage agreement attested to the direct diplomacy between Russian President Vladimir Putin and Erdogan, who were meeting again yesterday in the Black Sea city of Sochi.

"The international community cannot end the war in Ukraine by ignoring Russia," he said.

Putin sent troops into Ukraine on Feb. 24, sparking the biggest conflict in Europe since World War Two and fuelling a global energy and food crisis.

Yesterday, two grain ships set off from Chornomorsk and one from Odesa, carrying a total of about 58,000 tonnes of corn, the Turkish defence ministry said.

The Turkish bulk carrier Osprey S, flying the flag of Liberia, was expected to arrive in Chornomorsk yesterday to load up with grain, the regional administration of Odesa said.

Russia and Ukraine traditionally produce about one third of global wheat and Russia is Europe's main energy supplier. But Ukraine's grain exports were down 48.6% year on year so far this season, its agriculture ministry said.

Ukraine hopes to export 20 million tonnes of grain in silos and 40 million from its new harvest, economic adviser Oleh Ustenko said in July. The government hopes to earn $10 billion from those volumes but Ustenko said it could take 20 to 24 months to export them if ports are not functioning properly.

Ukraine's Seaport Authority said on Monday there were 68 ships in Ukrainian ports with 1.2 million tonnes of cargo on board, two thirds of it food.

After five months of fighting, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskiy this week described the pressure his armed forces were under in the eastern Donbas region as "hell".

We expect that the security guarantees of our partners from the UN and Turkey will continue to work, and food exports from our ports will become stable and predictable for all market participants

Anti-US protests erupt in Afghanistan

Reuters | Kabul

Hundreds of Afghans carried anti-American banners yesterday to protest against a US drone strike that Washington says killed Al-Qaeda leader Ayman Al-Zawahiri this month.

The protests were launched a day after the Taliban said their government had no information about Zawahiri "entering and living" in capital city Kabul and warned the United States to never repeat an attack on Afghan soil.

Photos shared on social media showed protesters in at least seven Afghan provinces carrying banners reading "Down with USA," "Joe Biden, stop lying" and "America is a liar."

Zawahiri, the top leader of the hard-line militant group, was killed with a missile fired from a drone while he stood on a balcony at his Kabul hideout on Sunday, US officials stated, the biggest blow to the militants since US Navy SEALS shot dead Osama bin Laden more than a decade ago.

Zawahiri's death in Kabul raised questions about whether he received sanctuary from the Taliban, who had assured the United States as part of a 2020 agreement on the withdrawal of US-led forces that they would not harbour other militant groups.
