Katy Perry and Orlando Bloom confirm split

Katy Perry and Orlando Bloom

Bang Showbiz | Los Angeles

Katy Perry and Orlando Bloom "have been shifting their relationship to focus on coparenting".

Representatives for the former couple finally confirmed their split after weeks of speculation, insisting that Katy, 40, and Orlando, 48, will "continue to be seen together as a family" as they focus on their daughter Daisy, four.

Their reps told Us Weekly in a joint statement: "Orlando and Katy have been shifting their relationship over the past many months to focus on coparenting. They will continue to be seen together as a family, as their shared priority is - and always will be - raising their daughter with love, stability and mutual respect."

Katy and Orlando are believed to have called off their engagement last month, after almost 10 years of dating.

A source previously told Us Weekly: "Katy and Orlando have split but are amicable. It's not contentious at the moment. Katy is of course upset but is relieved to not have to go through another divorce, as that was the worst time in her life."

The pair got engaged in 2019 and welcomed Daisy in 2020 and it is believed that they are determined to keep things amicable for Daisy.

The insider said: "They are still very much in touch. They aren't making drastic changes for Daisy's sake. They will keep their lives in Montecito [with a focus on] stability and consistency for Daisy."

John Cena loves a traditional fish and chips

Bang Showbiz | Los Angeles

John Cena absolutely loves fish and chips and a Full English Breakfast.

The 48-year-old actor has been over to the UK a lot over the past two decades during his time as a WWE superstar, and he's embraced the local cuisine to the point that he went for a very traditional meal before Tuesday's Heads of State world premiere in London.

Appearing on ITV daytime show This Morning, he said: "I enjoyed [fish and chips] so much that right before our premiere last night, we had about 90 minutes and myself and my two friends, all from America, we sat down, we ordered fish and chips, we had a pint, and that got us ready for the world premiere."

John - who revealed he went for vinegar and a little bit of dunking in the tartar sauce" - got more of a taste for a chippy after the dish plays a role in his new movie with Idris Elba.

The Hollywood star also opened up on his admiration for a "savoury breakfast", which he learned to love during his early WWE days.

He added: "All savoury! In America, we tend to lean on the sweet. It's all very filling, but very sweet. Boy, do I love a savoury breakfast! "I've been a fan of the English breakfast for a long time - you gotta remember, with WWE, I've been coming over here for 25 years."

Although the lines between real life and art have been blurred with his food preferences, John insisted that won't be the case after he played the President of the United States in the new action comedy.

He quipped: "I am playing the role of the president of the United States. I would much rather play the role of President of the United States than BE the President of the United States. I'm happy in my lane!"

When This Morning host Ben Shephard joked that real life president Donald Trump often appears to be playing a role too, the wrestling legend kept his response diplomatic.

Idris Elba reveals why he's never watched The Wire and never will

Bang Showbiz | Los Angeles

Idris Elba has insisted he will never watch The Wire.

The 52-year-old actor had his breakout US role was criminal Russell 'Stringer' Bell on the first three seasons of the hit HBO drama from 2002 to 2004, but he has admitted he never took the time to tune in "as a fan".

He told Amy Poehler on her Good Hang podcast: "If I'm really honest, like, I didn't watch The Wire.

"And I feel bad. It's not that I'm not a fan of it. I was there. I made a show that was, you know, was so intense and so real, so important. "And even though we didn't realise — I didn't realise the importance of the show while making it.

"I didn't participate in its celebration as a viewer, as a fan. And so I feel a little bit outside of the club."

Amy asked if he could start watching now, two decades, later, but he replied: "No, man."

The Heads of State actor admitted that after his character was killed off, he wasn't able to see the show in the same way.

He explained: "It's more that I feel the presence of it all, my life since The Wire... In terms of its impact.

"So to me, it was almost a bit like I was Stringer Bell. I'm not Stringer Bell, but I also feel like when Stringer Bell died, there was a part of me that died with that character.

"It's weird for me to go back and watch it."

Miley Cyrus

Miley Cyrus, Demi Moore and others will get stars on Hollywood Walk of Fame

Bang Showbiz | Los Angeles

Miley Cyrus says receiving a Hollywood Walk of Fame star "feels like a dream".

The 32-year-old singer and actress has been announced as part of the class of 2026 alongside the likes of Demi Moore, Timothée Chalamet, Shaquille O'Neal and more.

Reacting to the announcement on Instagram, Miley wrote: "When I first came to LA from Nashville as a little girl, my family would stay at a hotel on Hollywood Blvd, and I would go on late night walks with my dad when no one would recognize him.

"To now be cemented on this legendary boulevard, surrounded by the icons who inspired me, feels like a dream.

"This moment will live forever, thank you to everyone in my life who made it possible. I am grateful to share this star with you. (sic)"

On Wednesday, the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce announced 35 famous faces spanning five categories - motion pictures, television, live theatre/live performance, recording and sports entertainment - to receive the honour.

They said: "We are honored to welcome you to the Walk of Fame Class of 2026!"

Among those on the list on the film side are Emily Blunt, Rachel McAdams, Stanley Tucci, Rami Malek, Chris Columbus, Marion Cotillard and Molly Ringwald.

The television group includes the likes of Gordon Ramsay and Sarah Michelle Gellar, with comedian Gabriel 'Fluffy' Iglesias, while Miley is part of the recording list alongside Josh Groban, The Clark Sisters, Bone Thugs 'N Harmony and more.

Shaquille O'Neal is the only name in the sports entertainment category.
