Russia, Ukraine to hold talks in Geneva on February 17-18

US-mediated negotiations resume in Switzerland as the war enters its fifth year

● Russia appoints hawkish negotiator Vladimir Medinsky

● Ukraine seeks robust Western security guarantees

● Zelensky rallies allies at Munich conference

AFP | Kyiv

Russia and Ukraine will hold US-brokered talks on February 17-18 in Geneva, both countries said yesterday, announcing the next leg in fraught negotiations seeking to end the four-year war.

US President Donald Trump is pushing to end the conflict, unleashed when Russia invaded Ukraine in February 2022, but two previous rounds of US-mediated talks in Abu Dhabi have not yielded any signs of a breakthrough.

Both sides said publicly the discussions were productive, but Moscow and Kyiv remain far apart on the key issue of territory.

"The next round of talks on the Ukrainian settlement will be held in the same trilateral Russia-US-Ukraine format, on February 17-18 in Geneva," Russia's state-run RIA Novosti news agency cited Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov as saying.

Peskov said Moscow's delegation to Geneva will be headed by Vladimir Medinsky, a hawkish ex-culture minister who led previous failed talks in Turkey, in a switch from the senior military officials who led two previous rounds in Abu Dhabi.

Kyiv confirmed the talks were set for the scenic Swiss city.

"The Ukrainian delegation has already begun preparing for this meeting," said its top negotiator Rustem Umerov, head of Ukraine's National Security Council.

He will be joined by Zelensky's chief of staff and former spy master, Kyrylo Budanov, and a host of other officials.

Russia's switch of negotiating teams comes after an assassination attempt on the deputy of its top negotiator in Moscow earlier this month -- an attack it said was orchestrated by Kyiv.

Russia has continued to batter Ukrainian cities in recent days, killing six people across the country in overnight strikes that targeted the southern port city of Odesa and energy infrastructure.

Moscow has stuck to its demands in the talks for sweeping territorial and political concessions from Ukraine -- rejected by Kyiv as tantamount to capitulation.

Russia is pushing for Ukraine to pull out of the eastern Donetsk region -- around one-fifth of which Kyiv's forces still control.

US transfers thousands of IS detainees from Syria to Iraq

AFP | Baghdad

The United States Central Command said yesterday it had completed the transfer of thousands of detained Islamic State group suspects from Syria to Iraq.

They had been held in Syria for years in prisons run by Kurdish-led forces, but the recapture of surrounding territory by Damascus prompted Washington to step in.

CENTCOM said it "completed a transfer mission following a nighttime flight from northeastern Syria to Iraq on Feb 12 to help ensure ISIS detainees remain secure in detention facilities."

"The 23-day transfer mission began on Jan 21 and resulted in US forces successfully transporting more than 5,700 adult male ISIS fighters from detention facilities in Syria to Iraqi custody," it added in a statement.

The US had previously announced it would transfer around 7,000 detainees.

IS swept across Syria and Iraq

US military vehicles move along a road in a convoy transporting Islamic State group detainees being transferred to Iraq from Syria, on the outskirts of Qahtaniyah in Syria's northeastern Hasakah province in 2014, committing massacres and forcing women and girls into sexual slavery.

Backed by US-led forces, Iraq proclaimed the defeat of IS in the country in 2017, and the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) ultimately beat back the group in Syria two years later.

The SDF went on to jail thousands of suspected jihadists and detain tens of thousands of their relatives in camps.

'Job well done'

Last month, Syrian troops drove Kurdish forces from swathes of northern Syria, sparking questions over the fate of the IS prisoners.

Lingering doubts about security pushed Washington to announce it would transfer them to Iraq to prevent "a breakout" that could threaten the region.

"We appreciate Iraq's leadership and recognition that transferring the detainees is essential to regional security," said head of CENTCOM Admiral Brad Cooper.

"Job well done to the entire Joint Force team who executed this exceptionally challenging mission on the ground and in the air with great focus, professionalism, and collaboration with our regional partners," he added.

Most of the detainees are Syrian but there are also hundreds of foreign nationals from Arab countries as well as Europe, Asia and Australia, a senior Iraqi security source told AFP earlier this week.

Many prisons in Iraq are already packed with IS suspects.

The detainees in Syria were transferred to Baghdad's al-Karkh prison, once widely known as Camp Cropper where former Iraqi ruler Saddam Hussein was held before his execution.

To make space for the newcomers, authorities moved thousands of prisoners from the Karkh prison to other facilities, a lawyer and an inmate told AFP on condition of anonymity.

Earlier this month, Iraq's judiciary said it had begun investigations into detainees transferred from Syria.

Under Iraqi law, terrorism and murder offences are punishable by death, and execution decrees must be signed by the president.

Iraqi courts have handed down hundreds of death sentences and life terms to those convicted of terrorism offences, including foreign fighters.

Iraq has issued calls for countries to repatriate their nationals among the IS detainees, though this appears unlikely.

For years, Syria's Kurdish forces also called on foreign governments to take back their citizens, but this was done on a small scale limited to women and children held in detention camps.

India says world leaders, tech bosses to attend AI summit

AFP | New Delhi

At least 17 heads of state, the United Nations chief and several global tech CEOs are set to attend next week's AI Impact Summit in New Delhi, India said yesterday.

Touted as the biggest yet, it is the fourth edition of the annual global gathering to address the risks and opportunities posed by the booming artificial intelligence technology.

Leaders from France, Brazil, Spain, the United Arab Emirates and 13 other nations will join, as well as Google's Sundar Pichai, Sam Altman of OpenAI and Nvidia boss Jensen Huang, according to a statement from India's foreign ministry.

The summit "will bring together global leaders, policymakers, innovators, and experts from across the world to deliberate on the way forward for AI", it said.

Panels and talks are planned from Monday, and on Thursday Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi will open the two-day summit with leaders.

Earlier editions of the AI Impact Summit were held in Paris, Seoul and British wartime code-breaking hub Bletchley.

The Delhi event will focus on issues like child safety and sustainability.

Leaders from Bhutan, Croatia, Finland, Greece, Mauritius, the Netherlands, Serbia, Slovakia, Sri Lanka and Switzerland are among those who have confirmed they will attend, according to the foreign ministry.

Ministerial delegations from at least 45 countries and UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres will also be at the summit.
