Workers strike at GM plants in US

S ome 850 maintenance workers went on strike yesterday at General Motors plants in Michigan and Ohio amid an impasse in negotiations between the US automakers and the United Auto Workers.

The strike was against Armark, a contractor that handles maintenance services at GM installations in the Midwest, but was seen as a possible prelude to a walkout by the automaker's 46,000-strong unionized workforce.

The union's contract expired Saturday and officers of UAW locals were to meet on whether to go on strike at GM.

On Friday, the union extended its contract with Ford and Fiat Chrysler, but in a letter to union officers the chief UAW negotiator said there would be no extension of the GM contract.

Terry Dittes, a UAW vice president and chief negotiator with GM, said there had been little progress in the talks and mem- union official said. bers would work without a con-

The only union members employed by GM who were scheduled to work yesterday were at a GM pickup truck assembly plant in Flint, Michigan, a GM spokesman said.

Aramark maintenance workers in the Michigan cities of Hamtramck, Warren, Flint, Grand Blanc and Parma, Ohio have been working on an extended contract since March of 2018, a UAW spokesman said.

limate protection measures that → Chancellor Angela Merkel's conservatives and their Social Democrat coalition partners want to unveil next week will cost at least 40 billion euros until 2023, a person briefed on the talks told Reuters on Saturday.

"We agree that something needs to be done but it is still open which form this will take," said the source briefed on the talks, which ended late on Friday. "We still have not agreed on a price for a tonne of CO2."

The government wants to unveil its climate protection package on Sept. 20 and Merkel has said the plans would include some sort of carbon emissions pricing to finance measures aimed at reducing emissions.

Merkel's conservatives have been cast as more eager to ensure that the burden of financing the measures doesn't hurt German industry. The SPD want to protect small earners.

Merkel touched on those dilemmas facing her ministers in her podcast.

"On the one hand we want climate protections measures to be effective to meet our commitments," she said. "On the other hand we want to be economically sensible and act in a socially acceptable way so that all people can afford climate protection."

The plans are expected to touch on a broad range of issues such as exfor plane tickets.
