Saudi king tells UN kingdom supports efforts to prevent nuclear Iran
 Dubai

Saudi Arabia's King Salman bin Abdulaziz told the United Nations General Assembly on Wednesday that his kingdom supports efforts to prevent Iran from obtaining nuclear weapons.

"The kingdom insists on the importance of keeping the Middle East free of weapons of mass destruction, on this basis we support international efforts aiming at preventing Iran from having nuclear weapons," he said in a pre-recorded video address to the annual gathering.

"Iran is a neighbouring country, and we hope that our initial talks with it will lead to concrete results to build confidence ... based on... respect of sovereignty and non-interference in internal affairs," King Salman said.

In his address, King Salman said Yemen's Houthis were rejecting peaceful initiatives to end the war and that Saudi Arabia would defend itself against ballistic missiles and armed drones.

Bahrain team, HRH said, comprises the Executive and Legislative Authorities, the public and private sectors, and citizens and residents.

The statement came as HRH Prince Salman held a meeting with Fawzia bint Abdullah Zainal, the Speaker of the Council of Representatives, and Ali bin Saleh Al Saleh, the Chairman of the Shura Council at Gudaibiya Palace.

Prince Salman stressed the meeting on the need to build on the national achievements with a renewed determination to achieve the goals set by the Economic Vision 2030.

"This calls for continued commitment to implementing the

"One of the most important pillars of the development process is the realisation of the aspirations of the citizens and prosperity of the country, which is a continuous process," Prince Salman reminded.

The quality of planning and mastering the implementation would accelerate development in all areas, pointed out the Crown Prince and Prime Minister.
