Rita Ora feels lost in showbiz

London

inger Rita Ora has opened up about the struggles of her lifestyle in showbiz, saying she sometimes feels "lost" because of her job.

In an interview to Daily Star Online, the British star explained how much of a difference being in the industry makes to her life, reports mirror.co.uk.

"It's such a high, and then such a low," she said.

"It happens all the time. Especially when I have done something like a show... I get home and I'm like, 'Wow this is crazy'," the singer continued.

The star says she likes to keep things real, and confessed that having a life in the public eye pushes her to work that bit harder. She said that she "always" wants to move onto the next thing, even if it does get slightly stressful at times.

"You have to find a medium with anything," Ora added.

The "Let me love you" hitmaker said that she tries to keep a "normal" routine - by including meditating or talking to her friends on FaceTime.

Ora admitted that she still gets an adrenaline rush everytime she goes onstage, and never takes her job for granted. She said: "I try to workout all the time to keep my sanity as you can really get lost in this world. I think it is important."

Covid-19: John Prine in critical condition

John Prine Los Angeles

Cinger-songwriter John DPrine, who received a Grammy lifetime achievement award this year, is in critical condition with symptoms of coronavirus.

The 73-year-old singer's family shared the news via his Twitter account on Sunday, reports variety.com.

"After a sudden onset of Covid-19 symptoms, John was hospitalised on Thursday (March 26)," said the statement from the Prine family. "He was intubated Saturday evening, and continues to receive care, but his situation is critical. This is hard news for us to share. But so many of you have loved and supported John over the years, we wanted to let you know, and give you the chance to send on more of that love and support now. And know that we love you, and John loves you," the post read further.

Britney reflects on 20 years since 'Oops!... I did it again'

Los Angeles

➤ inger Britney Spears took to social media to reflect on 20 years since the release of her iconic 2000 hit "Oops!... I did it again".

Spears released the tune as the lead single from her second album of the same name, with the record peaking at number nine on the Billboard 100 chart and securing the singer a Grammy nomination for Best Female Pop Vocal Performance, reports aceshowbiz.com.

The release was accompanied by a music video featuring the singer wearing a red PVC catsuit and, alongside stills from the shoot, she wrote on Instagram: "Oops!... how did 20 years go by so fast?!??!Ican't believe it. I remem- es, before resuming filming ber that red suit was so freaking four hours later.
